Belize

Belize is somewhat of an anomaly. Peaceful, democratic and primarily English speaking it seems in many ways not to belong in Central America at all. Indeed to an extent, it is more a Caribbean nation rather than a Latin one, looking out from the coast rather than inland for its trade and alliances.

On the other hand it has plenty of distinctively Central American features: a blend of cultures and races that includes, in tiny populations, Mayan, Mestizo, African and European. Spanish runs a close second as a spoken language to the rich local Creole.

The peaceful atmosphere, together with the spectacular natural beauty of the landscape and coast, has started to draw increasing numbers of tourists every year. Over half of them are from North America, but a growing number come from Europe, mostly from Britain.

Belize is by no means crowded, although, it is barely bigger than Wales. It has the lowest population density in Central America. Its land area is almost equivalent to the amount of territorial waters, giving visitors plenty of scope to explore little-visited islands as well as the heartland of the ancient Mayan culture.

Dear Cruise Director,

Who is this "Petite Picasso" I keep hearing about?

Born in Romania in 1985, Alexandra Nechita began working with coloring books at the age of two, graduating to oils and acrylics by age seven. As an abstract cubist painter, like Picasso, Nechita's strikingly accomplished canvases were first exhibited at a local library in 1994 and then a year later at the prestigious Mary Paxon Gallery. Now as a teenager, her exhibits attract capacity crowds and her paintings are collected by art lovers from around the world. Alexandra Nechita has created works at the famous Mourtot Press in Paris where only great artists like Picasso, Chagall, Matisse, and Miro have been invited to work. To see exciting art works on display, visit our Art Gallery, Deck 10, Mid.
